A Regiment Tested Like Never Before

As war erupted across the globe, the 155 Lanarkshire Yeomanry Field Regiment found themselves thrust into the heart of the conflict, tasked with defending the strategically vital stronghold of Singapore against the relentless Japanese invasion. Amidst the chaos and bloodshed, these brave soldiers fought valiantly, their unwavering determination tested to its limits.

The Fall of Singapore and the Horrors of Captivity

Despite their valiant efforts, Singapore fell to the Japanese in February 1942, and the 155th Regiment found themselves prisoners of war. They were subjected to unimaginable hardships, enduring starvation, disease, and brutal treatment at the hands of their captors. Their resilience and camaraderie were pushed to the brink as they struggled to survive the horrors of the POW camps.

Breaking the Chains of Oppression

Through harrowing ordeals and countless sacrifices, the 155th Regiment's resolve never wavered. They organized secret resistance networks, maintained a sense of discipline, and provided solace and hope to their fellow prisoners. Their unwavering spirit and indomitable will to survive became a beacon of resilience in the face of adversity.

Liberation and the Long Road Home

As the war finally drew to a close, the 155th Regiment was liberated from Japanese captivity. The horrors they had endured would forever be etched in their memories, but their courage and resilience had triumphed over adversity. The survivors made their arduous journey back to their homeland, where they were greeted as heroes.
