The book begins with a discussion of the theoretical foundations of architectural conservation, exploring the different approaches to preserving and restoring historic buildings and landscapes. This is followed by a detailed examination of the history of architectural conservation in Europe and the Americas, from its early beginnings in the Renaissance to the present day.

The book then goes on to explore the different types of architectural conservation projects that are undertaken today, including the restoration of historic buildings, the conservation of archaeological sites, and the preservation of cultural landscapes. Each chapter is illustrated with numerous case studies, highlighting the latest innovations in preservation techniques and the challenges faced by conservators in different parts of the world.

Architectural Conservation in Europe and the Americas is an essential resource for anyone interested in the preservation of our cultural heritage. It is a valuable reference for architects, historians, conservators, and policymakers, as well as for students and general readers.
